"Defying the Statues." "Equar' Jackson," as he was called from having held the office of justice of the peace for ever so many years in a small fown in Missouri, cama juto the village one evening from his farm, a couple of miles out, and reported that two suspidious characters had been seen lurking around his place, and he wanted help to go back and eapture them. As the consishie was out of sown, four or five of us young follows, who were guests at the hotel, got out our pistols and volunteered for the expedition. When we reached his place his wife came out with the information that she had seen the men enter the barn. This meant that they were after the squire's pacing mare, and the crowd wanted to close in at once and cap-

"No, gentlemen, it wouldn't be regular and accordin' to law," protested the aquire.
"They are simply trespassers now, and trespassing ain't much of a crime."
"But they'll get the horse," said one.

"That's what I want 'em to do. Then it's a case of hose stealing. Now, two of on go over by the stack and two more by the shed, and I'll stend right here. If they come out with the hoss I'll fix 'em."
We didn't want it that way, but he for sisted, and we had only waited five minutes when out they came, both on the mare's back. We could have caught 'em by a rush, but the squire motioned us to keep quiet, and as they advanced on him he held up his hand and shouted: "In the name and by the authority vested in me by the people of the state of Missouri I command you to halt!" "Here's lookin' at ye, old man," chuckled one of the men in reply, and they jumped the mare at him and knocked h over heels, and were off through the open gate at a gallop, never to be seen again. We went over and picked the squire up. It was all of ten minutes before he spoke, and then he gasped out: "Think of it, gentlement They coolly defied the statues of the sovereign state of Missouri!"-New York Sun.

A Romance Spoiled. Two lovers went to the baseball game One afternoon in May | He was a "crimic"; she never had seen Professional players play.

He faithfully tried to explain it all. She tried to understand; But the more he talked, the less she knew Why he thought the game was "grand.

He cheered, he danced, he yelled "Hi! hit" She asked if the man was out.

But when the game was done He found that whenever a foul was his She had given the man a run

It dampened his arder to have her say:
"Why doesn't the umpire but?"
And each question she asked dimintshed his Though he wouldn't have owned to that. Till at last the asked in her guileless way,
"Which nine is playing now?"

He broke the engagement then and there,
